Truck Stops Traffic for Hour to Donate to Sandy Families A truck carrying emergency supplies — including 2-wheel and 4-wheel-drive flood models — was parked on a 14-acre farm Monday afternoon, blocking traffic on Route 24 in Washington Township to collect money for Sandy victims. James and Kathleen Jones had been expecting the call from the American Red Cross, but had no idea it would involve a half-hour traffic jam. "I thought it was going to be a simple check or whatever," James Jones said. "It was a little surprising." But it was worth it to the Jones

.Q: Can I use all of these types of NN apps for the same project? I am new to neural network training in Python. I have been reading about some of the neural networks popularly used in the industry, like LSTMs, CNNs, DNNs etc. Among these, I understand that CNNs are models that take a number of images and classify them using a set of features i.e. let us say their NN is passing the above image and then adding the features to them. Now the type of features that CNNs use is different as well. For example, usually conv layers are used to extract features and fully connected layers (hidden layers) are used to pass the learnt features to a softmax and classifier. My question is - can I use all of these types of NN models for the same project with different layers and algorithms (like, more CNNs are fine but not sure, though I am not suggesting it; and if yes, which) I don't mean to list all the ways in which I can use them, just want to understand the benefits that I get if I use these different types of NNs when there is no 'right one'. A: There are a
